YOUNG's Night Thoughts.

TO know how to moderate our desires, is going a great way in the path which leads to true happiness. The generality of men pass their lives in wishing for what they cannot obtain; or, if they obtain that wish, they presently form new ones: Their hearts are swelled with more desires than there are waves on the troubled ocean; some are confused, others hurtful, some horrid and detestable; some are ridiculous and senseless, while there are others conformable to reason and virtue: In fine, there is nothing, that is either allowable or criminal, but what is by turns the object of men's wishes.

To expect that a man should have no desires, is the same thing as to require him to cease to be man; for there are many desires which are essential to his natural existence. These do no prejudice to his happiness, but, on the contrary tend to his preservation, and instruct him in what is necessary to it. To desire to eat, drink, sleep, or walk, when nature makes us sensible of hunger, thirst, drowsiness, uneasiness to be always sitting or lying down, is but natural. To wish the prosperity of our kindred, friends, and of good men, is acting according to reason; but there are other desires, which are as pernicious, and as much to be condemned, as these are useful and commendable; and nevertheless, as vicious and unreasonable as such desires are, they are so violent, that there is nothing which a man will not attempt to satisfy them. He scowers sea and land, exposes his life to war, violates friendship, paternal love, filial tenderness; betrays his country; abandons his religion and his God; and, after so many enormous crimes, it often happens, that he is justly punished, not only in being disappointed of what he desires, but in the loss of what he enjoys. By coveting superfluities, he deprives himself of necessaries; and fortune, from which he expected new favours, deprives him even of those for which he was obliged to nature. He torments himself to acquire riches, but remains poor, and loses his health. He hazards his life to gratify his boundless ambition; but, though he has lost an arm perhaps, he is still only where he was: He has betrayed his friend, to make his court to his Sovereign; who loves the treason, while he hates the traitor: He has changed his religion, in hopes to be revenged on its professors; but is as much despised by those of the religion which he embraces, as by those of the religion which he quitted.

If men were not so blind as they are, they would not spend so great a part of a life so short, in an uneasiness betwixt the fears and hopes of satisfying their avarice or ambition: They would see, that the happiness they propose, is not in every thing of which they are desirous; they would know, that true human felicity consists in the tranquility of the mind, and the health of the body, and that it is impossible to find it elsewhere; they would also be sensible, that the real demands of nature are but few. Nature, in order to be preserved from distress, needs no stately palaces, nor spacious gardens adorned with statutes of marble and brass; but is satisfied with the natural tapistry of the tender grass, and enjoys all the comforts of health near some fresh-running stream, and under the covert of trees. Why does man form so many schemes to obtain grandeur, which is no conducement to happiness, and which cannot procure him either health or peace of mind? Montaigne, whom the French are obliged to for having taught them to think, gives us a very true and edifying description of the miseries of the great: "Do fevers, gout, and apoplexies, says he, spare them any more than us? When old age hangs heavy on a Prince's shoulders, can the yeomen of his guard ease him of that burden? When he is terrified with the approach of death, can the gentlemen of his bedchamber comfort and fortify him? When jealousy, or any other caprice, fills his brain, can our compliments and ceremonies restore him to good humour? The canopy of the bed he lies on, embroidered ever so much with gold and pearl, has no virtue against the cholic. At the last twitch of the gout, what signifies it to be called Sire and Majesty? Does he lose it by the remembrance of his palaces and grandeur? If he be angry, can his being a prince keep him from looking red, or turning pale and grinding his teeth like a madman? The least prick of a pin, or the least passion of the soul, is enough to deprive a man of the pleasure of being sole monarch of the world."

Nature is easy to be satisfied with regard to the understanding, as to the body; in order to render the mind contented and tranquil, it is not necessary to possess great employments, to enjoy vast wealth; it is sufficient for us to love virtue, and to know how to be satisfied with a little, because it is but little that we really want. In proportion as we retrench ourselves, all that heaven grants us besides is superfluity. The more we wish to acquire, the more we want, and the farther we deviate from that happiness which we aim at. What felicity can greatness give us, that is not to be met with in a middle state? Whoever knows how to limit himself to a moderate fortune, is truly rich. If a man measures his necessities by nature, he will never be poor; if by opinion, he will never be rich. A man need not be a philosopher to learn to contemn grandeur, and to know of what little avail riches are to the attainment of true happiness; he need only examine what such wealth and grandeur amount to in the end; for, in fine, if it be evident to him, that they cannot procure real felicity, but are often pernicious to the owners, he will be convinced that a condition where a man has barely what is necessary, is preferable to a state of superfluity. Let us only consider what advantage Great Men can possibly reap from their wealth and grandeur; if their aim be to save their riches, or to increase them, it gives them a thousand uneasinesses; and, if they desire to make a good use of them, and distribute them prudently and according to their own opinion, they subject them to infinite cares and most vexatious perplexities; nor is their grandeur less a burden to them than their wealth. If a king be virtuous, he is unavoidably taken up continually with the government of his state, he is under a necessity of being watchful for the happiness and preservation of his people, and must consider himself as the father of a family obliged to maintain peace and plenty among his children. If this king be not virtuous, he is nevertheless obliged to act for his subjects out of state policy, though not from any love that he bears them; his fear, lest his neighbour should rob him of part of what he enjoys, is enough to give him a thousand uneasy thoughts. Thus every sovereign is necessarily exposed by his condition to a thousand cares, from which a private person is exempted; it is therefore senseless to desire the state of a sovereign, and to think it more capable of rendering us more happy, than that of a man, who, far from noise and free from ambition, lives contented with what he has, and looks upon health the most precious boon of heaven, next to virtue.

Whatever a man enjoys, he is unhappy, so long as he desires an addition to it; his greediness, to obtain what he covets, hinders him from having a true relish of what he possesses. He is a slave to his desires; then it is that he thinks superfluous wealth necessary; and his fancy, which is continually brooding new wishes, drags him to a precipice, which has no bottom or banks where he can stop. But, when a man is contented with what he enjoys; when he has within himself what the covetous and ambitious think to find in the fortune which they pursue; he knows the full value of what goods he has, and enjoys them with that pleasant tranquility which renders them more pure and delicate. The covetous man, who travels thro' Europe to enrich himself, knows not the sweetness of sleep like that citizen who lives quietly in his own house. The farmer grudges the time he abandons to rest, as so much time lost in the improvement of his affairs; and, drowsy as he is, he gets up early in the morning. The other sleeps quietly as long as he will; and, when he awakes, his mind and his body are refreshed by the rest which he has taken: He is quiet, he laughs, eats, drinks, and, in short, does every thing with pleasure; while the covetous man, being quite worn down with fatigue, finds no relish in what he eats, is in an ill humour, is angry or uneasy at the least trifle, and spits the bitterness of his gall upon all pleasures, which the man, who desires but little, enjoys without alloy.

LONDON, MARCH 31.

IF it be true that Lord North ſtrenuouſly oppoſed in Council, the intermeddling in the affairs of Denmark, one may ſafely venture to pronounce him a friend to the family of his Sovereign. There is a national dignity which every Miniſter ſhould endeavour to preſerve. The ſlighteſt infringement upon national honour ſhould be chaſtiſed with ſeverity, becauſe the moment a miniſtry ſuffers inſults to paſs unnoticed, a kingdom muſt become deſpicable in the eyes of foreigners, who will make no ſcruple to injure thoſe that have not ſpirit enough to reſent. I cautiouſly avoid touching upon the crimes which the Queen of Denmark is charged with having committed; whether ſhe has, or has not, been ſo indiſcreet as to make a tender of her affections to Struenſee, is altogether immaterial; ſhe is a Princeſs of England, and it is morally impoſſible for any puniſhment to be inflicted upon her, but what muſt obliquely caſt a diſgrace upon this nation. This, I think, is a truth not to be controverted: And, granting this poſition, it neceſſarily follows, that our miniſters are extremely culpable, in ſuffering ſuch an indignity as the impriſonment of our Sovereign's ſiſter to paſs without the ſevereſt cenſure. To ſay, that the laws of Denmark muſt firſt take their courſe, is, in other words, to ſay that the Queen of Denmark muſt firſt be puniſhed, before we can interfere. But, why is ſhe to be left to the mercy of her enemies? Why is ſhe to fall a ſacrifice to the ambitious views of a woman, who manifeſtly wiſhes to exterminate both her and her offspring? If, for the ſake of form, the Queen is to undergo a trial; there can be no manner of doubt but her enemies will be able to prove any thing againſt her, which may contribute to accompliſh their deſigns, or ſignify their villainous purpoſes. In ſhort, the conduct of the miniſtry on this occaſion evinces, that all regard to the honour of the nation, all feeling for his Majeſty's family, is out of the queſtion. I ſincerely hope, however, that thoſe who love their country will ſtep forth, and ſhew their zeal for the welfare of an unfortunate lady, who is impriſoned by a ſet of people that want to raiſe themſelves upon her deſtruction.

A gentleman expreſſing his ſurprize to his friend at the Smyrna Coffee-houſe, that ſo great a majority as 68 for the bill, and 25 againſt it, could be found to paſs the Royal Marriage Bill, the latter replied, that if the Miniſtry brought in a bill for annihilating the Chriſtian Religion, the Biſhops themſelves would vote for it, provided they were continued in the poſſeſſion of their temporalities.

It is ſaid that Lord Chatham has lately declared, that, in his opinion, the bill for regulating the marriages of the Royal Family is a more hateful ſtretch of deſpotiſm, than what the Middleſex election was conſidered to be by the kingdom. "Parliamentary privilege, ſays his Lordſhip, is a ground upon which wiſe men have doubted, and good men differed." But in the preſent caſe, there can be neither difference nor doubt. The firſt principles of natural juſtice are obviouſly violated, when a King of eighteen is to controul the marriage of Princes who are twenty-five; and when the poſſible heirs of the Crown are to be laid under reſtrictions, from which the poſſeſſor is exempted, though his choice is of infinitely greater importance to the people.

The following anecdote of the Earl of Northington, when on his death-bed, may be depended upon.——Lady Northington being by the bed-ſide, in converſation on the preſent ſtate of his illneſs, his Lordſhip told her "He muſt be d——d—he knew it very well—he was ſure he ſhould be d——d"—Her Ladyſhip begged he would not talk in ſuch a manner—intreated him not to add to her diſtreſſes, by ſuch an affecting aſſertion of deſpair—it was too much for her to ſupport.—The dying Earl, however, kept repeating that "he ſhould be d——d—that the ſentence was irrevocable," and to that effect. The poor afflicted lady implored him to be more compoſed, and with great earneſtneſs, ſolicited that Dean F—— (who was one of the Noble Lord's jovial companions, and had been promoted by his influence) then below ſtairs, might be permitted to come up and pray by him:—"There now" (replied the Earl) "that is the very thing—you have juſt hit the mark, my lady—I ſhall certainly be d——d for making that fellow a Dean."

It has been frequently thrown in the teeth of our Nabobs, that their wealth has introduced luxury and promoted bribery in obtaining boroughs, to the depriving of the landed gentlemen of their ſeats in Parliament, and purchaſing them out of their eſtates. Mr. Rous told, in his ſpeech in the Houſe of Commons on Monday laſt, very properly told the landed Gentry, that it was not the wealth of the Eaſt, but was more owing to their own extravagance, gaming and debaucheries, which laid them under a neceſſity of parting with their paternal eſtates.

Wedneſday a Woman, who pretended to be deaf and dumb, by motions told fortunes, and a man, her interpreter, were committed to Tothill-Fields Bridewell, by Juſtice [illegible], for defrauding a young lady of 300l. on pretence of [illegible] to a huſband.

To the Printer. "THERE is no man who has a higher reſpect for his Majeſty than I have, or who thinks better of his Miniſters; but there is a danger now impending over our [illegible] which every good Engliſhman ought to think of with [illegible] and to do his utmoſt to guard againſt it.——Who ſhall [illegible] whether the Prince of Wales ſhall have children? If he ſhould not, then by debaring his brother from marrying, we [illegible] throw this kingdom into the hands of foreigners; and [illegible] all ſay to whom the Princeſs Royal may be married? Should the Emperor of Ruſſia demand her, will it not be thought [illegible] deny to her ſo advantageous a match? Will then our [illegible] rejoice in being ſubjects of Ruſſia?——Should a King [illegible] Sweden aſk her, is her ſon to be heir of Sweden and of England, and involve us in the inextricable labyrinth of Northern politics?——Should an Elector of Brandenburgh offer himſelf, will he be refuſed? And after that family has already exhauſted ſixty millions of our treaſure, is an enemy, and as an Ally do we know with to deliver up the whole, by making a Pruſſian deſpot heir to the crown of Great-Britain?——We may prevent ſo pernicious a bill from paſſing into an act; but it will be impoſſible hereafter to get it repealed, how much ſoever ſucceeding generations may groan under the weight of this foreign thraldom. If it were poſſible, yet ſhall we now unneceſſarily create an evil upon the mere chance of afterwards remedying it."

MARCH 26.

What follows is a fact well known in the neighbourhood of Berkhamſtead. A few Sundays ago ſome choice ſpirits from London were regaling at an inn, when after dinner the liquor introduced the loſe of frolick, after the burning of hats and wigs, it was propoſed to draw lots which of the company ſhould be hanged, and during the courſe of the bottle it was demonſtrated to the ſatisfaction of the whole company, that it was a death without pain. The lot fell upon a young man who had but juſt entered upon the fortunate eſtate of a bankrupt, however, whether he thought the advantages of bankruptcy not ſo great as it is in general believed, or he wiſhed to be in the fashion of going out of the world in a ſtring, he declared to die hard like a cock. A convenient place in the room preſented itſelf, and in an inſtant his own garters furniſhed the nooſe, the knot was fixed, and the chair in a minute knocked from under him.

Whatever was the opinion before about this death being without pain, the volunteer criminal made ſuch a kicking againſt the wainſcot, that the landlord was brought into the room by the noiſe; whom he ſaw the companions almoſt as black in the face with laughing as the young man was with the agonies of death. The landlord aſtoniſhed and diſtreſt at the ſight, cut down the almoſt expiring youth, and with the aſſiſtance of a ſurgeon, and proper care, he is ſince recovered; and it is remarkable, that the firſt words he ſpoke after he recovered were, I'll be hanged and damned too, if I ever do the ſame again.

There is advice from Copenhagen, that the Dey of Algiers, in conſequence of a magnificent preſent, has concluded a treaty with that Court, and has given orders for all the Daniſh ſubjects at preſent impriſoned in his territories to be immediately releaſed. The veſſels lately confiſcated are alſo to be delivered up.

Yeſterday morning an extraordinary courier arrived at St. James's from the Court of France.

In the Cabinet Council held on Monday laſt at St. James's, the ſending a new ambaſſador to Stockholm was reſolved upon.

Letters from Riga mention, that 14 large tranſports were loading there with timber, iron, cables and cannon, for Carthagena.

Advice is received from Gibraltar, that the garriſon there is in great want of all ſorts of proviſions; that the Governor ſent to the Emperor of Morocco, requeſting that he would trade with the Engliſh for live cattle and other proviſions, which was abſolutely refuſed, on account that the uſual preſents have not been ſent him; upon which the men of war aſſiſted them with ſome of their proviſion, which, it is hoped, will laſt 'till ſome ſhips arrive from America, who are hourly expected.

Extract of a private letter from a gentleman in the county of Antrim, to his friend in Dublin, dated March 29.

"I have this inſtant (Sunday morning, 12 o'clock) heard of an engagement, of which the following are the particulars.

"A gentleman near Ballymenagh, received a threatening letter laſt week from the Hearts of Steel, peremptorily commanding him to leave a ſum of money in a certain place; he took no notice of the firſt, they then ſent a ſecond, which had no effect, then the third, in a moſt gigantic terrifying ſtyle.—But all to no purpoſe; they then ſent him a fourth, telling him, in ſo many hours, if the money was not left as deſired, they would burn hell, and fire the devil, &c. This laſt he anſwered properly, and with ſpirit, and as he did expect they would viſit him, he had a ſerjeant and twelve men privately conveyed into the houſe; in a ſhort time after the Steel Boys came, and fired into the houſe; mean time the ſerjeant and men ſtole out backwards unperceived, and came unexpected round on them, with fixed bayonets, fired on them, killed one, wounded ſeveral others, and took two priſoners, who have ſince turned King's evidences and impeached numbers; they were all in confuſion, and fled precipitately, on ſeeing the ſoldiers.

"Eleven o'clock Monday night, this inſtant, a report prevails, and is credited by the better ſort of people, that Savage is taken; he cut one of the Light Dragoon's hands almoſt off, and another down the back in a moſt terrible manner, upon their entering the houſe where he lodged; he is now ſaid and believed to be in Omagh gaol."

APRIL 4.

Thomas Bennet, who was caſt for tranſportation, for ſtealing a number of ſilver ſpoons, at the entertainment given by Sir Watkin-William Wynne, at Shrewſbury, was poſſeſſed of an eſtate of 200 l. per annum, beſides 4000l. in ready caſh, which he aſſigned over to truſtees for his ſon.

APRIL 6.

Laſt week ſome gentlemen of fortune arrived in town from Guernſey, to ſolicit the grant of certain tracts of lands on the banks of the Miſſiſippi in North-America, with an intention to be ſettled with French Proteſtant families from Normandy.

By a gentleman arrived in town laſt week from Breſt, we learn, that a Rear Admiral was to ſet ſail from that port in a few days, with three ſhips of 74 guns, two of 60, and three of 40 each, but that their deſtination was kept a profound ſecret.

Letters from Rome ſay, that the Pope being informed, that the Apoſtolic Chamber was in great want of money, had given thereto half the revenues of the Compœnda, which belonged to his Holineſs.

They write from Paris, that they have received ſeveral private letters from Spain, importing that freſh troubles were breaking out in different parts of that kingdom, on account of the farms lately eſtabliſhed by his Catholic Majeſty.

We hear that Prince Charles, of Lorrain, intends to pay a viſit to the Britiſh Court this ſummer.

It is remarkable, that the two Sovereigns, who reign in Poland are, what Mr. Fox would call the ſcum of the earth. Biron, the old Duke of Courland was once a Barber; and the grandfather of Staniſlaus Auguſtus was a private horſeman, who came from Sweden to puſh his fortune on the Viſtula. He was, however, what we generally call a poor gentleman.

WATERFORD, April 3. By a private letter from a gentleman in the North, to his friend in this city, we learn, that whole villages have embarked at the different ports there for America, and that numbers of others were preparing to follow their example; ſo that in a ſhort time we ſhall ſee that once flouriſhing province reduced to beggary, and entirely depopulated.

NEW-YORK, MAY 7.

...Sunday morning between two and three o'clock, a ter-...rible fire broke out in Water-ſtreet, near Mr. Degruſhe's ..., in Mr. Benjamin Hildreth's diſtillery, in which, belong-...o the tenants, Meſſrs. Belitho and Springal, was a large ...ity of rum, ſugar and molaſſes, which greatly increaſed the fury and rapidity of the flames, communicating them to the adjacent houſes, moſtly built of wood, ſo ſuddenly, that many of the people had hardly time to ſave their furniture, &c. and before the inhabitants could aſſemble in ſufficient numbers to ſuppreſs the flames, nine dwelling-houſes, a diſtillery, two ſtore-houſes, and a chair-houſe were reduced to aſhes, and ſeveral others damaged.

MAY 18. Friday afternoon Captain Quill arrived here in eighteen days from Cape Nichola, and informs, that on the 26th ult. a French officer with a party of ſoldiers, boarded all the veſſels at the Mole at night, under pretence of looking for deſerters, and carried aſhore the Captains Davis, Grennell, Tucker and Brown, and confined them in goal for thirty hours, but then ſet them at liberty.

MAY 25. The following is an extract of a letter from Newry, in Ireland, dated March 31.—"The North of Ireland is in the greateſt confuſion it ever was ſince King James's time (occaſioned it is ſaid by the landlords raiſing the rents ſo high, that the poor cannot live, by ſome late laws for incloſing the common lands, and other impoſitions.) There are, it is ſuppoſed, in each of the northern counties, above 15,000 men, who call themſelves Hearts of Steel, aſſemble in the evening at the ſound of horns, march in the night through the country, take all the arms and ammunition they can find, go among the great gentlemen and landlords, oblige them to ſwear never to ſet their lands at above twelve ſhillings an acre, deſtroy all leaſes taken at a higher rent, and oblige the landlords to give new ones at that rate. All who join, they ſwear to be true to the King, and Hearts of Steel, with ſome other articles, which are kept ſecret; each party have a poſt-office for their letters. The whole army of the kingdom, both horſe and foot, are ſent againſt them, but cannot ſubdue them, though many of their out-ſcouts, and all perſons that are ſuſpected, or heard to talk of the Hearts of Steel, have been taken, and ſent to priſon, ſo that the goals are as full as they can hold, and the country is lying perfectly waſte, for not one labourer is to be had, except old men and women: God knows how the matter will end."

PHILADELPHIA, MAY 7.

Captain Burchmore, from Grenada, brings advice, that writs for the election of members of aſſembly for the iſland of Grenada, have been lately iſſued by his Excellency Governor Leyborne, which have been ſtrenuouſly oppoſed by the patriotic merchants, freeholders, and others, of that iſland, who complain loudly of the former and preſent illegal proceedings of the Governor and Council; and they have preſented a petition to his Excellency, couched in the ſtrongeſt terms, ſetting forth, That according to the laws of England, no Roman Catholic can be admitted as a member of their aſſembly; and intreat that his Excellency would recal the preſent writs, and be pleaſed to iſſue others for convening of an aſſembly in the form and manner deſcribed by the laws of Great-Britain and that colony. Likewiſe, a proteſt was entered by 21 freeholders, againſt all the actings and doings of the aſſembly that may meet in conſequence of the ſaid writs; and declare, that ſuch aſſembly will not be a lawful repreſentative of the inhabitants of that iſland, and conſequently, will be without power to make laws, or do ...ther act, matter, or thing to bind the ſaid inhabitants. Yet, ...withſtanding the above-mentioned petition and proteſt, we ...ſured, that on the 9th of March laſt, the general aſſembly ...renada met, and the members preſent were ſworn before ...Excellency in Council.

MAY 14. A letter from a gentleman in London to his ...nd in Philadelphia, dated March 1, ſays, "Cooper and ...ax have preſented a petition for an American Biſhop, and moving every ſpring to ſupport this pious inſtitution. Counpetitions ought to be forwarded from every opponent of this deſign. Lord North wiſhes to know upon what grounds to oppoſe it, and Hillſborough is not friendly to it; but the virtuous Duke of Grafton is, I am told, very zealous. Something ſhould certainly be done, but I think no one denomination of diſſenters ſhould ſingly take the weight of the matter on them."

To the Printer of the Pennſylvania Chronicle.

The late extraordinary event that has happened in Denmark, brings to my memory a ſtory related in the ancient hiſtory of that kingdom, written in the High Dutch language, which bears a ſtriking reſemblance to it, as well in its tragical conſequences, as it doubtleſs does in the innocence of the parties, and perhaps may in its final iſſue, and which at once ſhews the ſuſpicious temper, and violent paſſions of that untractable people.

IN the time of Iarmericus, King of Denmark, who reigned between the Year of our Lord 351 and 369, his ſon was ſuſpected of having had criminal commerce with his mother-in-law Suavilda; and the ſentence pronounced againſt them was, that the Queen ſhould be torn in pieces by horſes, which was accordingly executed; and that the Prince ſhould be ſtrangled. The dog and the birds which were kept in the Prince's apartments ſet up ſo unuſual a cry, that the King relented, and pardoned the Prince, who was raiſed up for execution, at the inſtant the royal reprieve arrived. The brothers of the innocently condemned Queen made themſelves maſters of the King's perſon, and ſatiated their revenge.——His ſon Broderus ſucceeded to the Crown of Denmark in the Year 367.

"A philoſopher of one of our univerſities, has juſt publiſhed a diſſertation on the celebrated Mr. Franklin's Theory of Electricity, explaining the Leyden experiment, with illuſtrations of many conſiderable exceptions againſt that applauded theory. To the Leyden electrical experiment no body is a ſtranger, and, it is well known, that Profeſſor Muſchenbrock was ſtricken with ſuch amaze and terror, at its effect, that in a letter to Mr. Braumur, he ſays, he would not, for the whole kingdom of France, make a ſecond repetition of that tremendous experiment. Our young author, after a ſuccinct view of Mr. Franklin's explication, points out the inconveniences of his theory, at the ſame time obſerving all the reſpect due to that excellent perſon, and ſhewing by what modes and amendments his theory may be ſtill retained."

MAY 25.

On Thurſday evening laſt was married the Hon. Richard Penn, Eſq; Lieutenant-Governor of this Province, to Miſs Polly Maſters, daughter of the late William Maſters, Eſq; formerly a Repreſentative of this city in General Aſſembly.

A few days ago his Majeſty's 21ſt regiment, or Royal North Britiſh Fuſileers, under the immediate command of Major Sutherland, left this city and marched to New-York.

Laſt week Mr. Iſaiah Mills of Salem, Weſt-New-Jerſey, who had been blind of both eyes, with a confirmed Gutta Serena, was reſtored to his ſight, ſo as now to be able to read, or to do any kind of buſineſs, by Dr. Graham, Oculiſt and Auriſt in this city.

Extract of a letter from a correſpondent in Cheſter County, dated on Thurſday laſt.

"On Saturday laſt as Henry Philips and Richard Kelly, two labouring men, were at work together, on the plantation of Mr. David Davis, in Tredyffrin townſhip, in this county, a quarrel happened between them, in which the latter ſtruck the former, who thereupon went home, and told Mr. Davis, his employer, that Kelly had ſtruck him, and that he was determined to go to a juſtice and get a warrant for him. Mr. Davis adviſed him to ſtay until morning, and, in the mean time, conſider of it (expecting by that time that his paſſion would ſubſide) on which Philips took a gun, charged it, went to the wood where Kelly was, and ſhot him dead on the ſpot. He then returned, and declared Mr. Davis to bind him, for that he had killed Kelly. At firſt his information was diſcredited, as he always had borne the character of a harmleſs fellow; but on finding it was true, he was ſecured and committed to Cheſter goal. The Coroner's inqueſt brought in their verdict wilful murder."

On Monday laſt departed this life, much lamented, William Hicks, Eſq; Prothonotary of Bucks county, and one of the Governor's Council. A gentleman, whoſe candour, ſincerity, and peculiar talents for pleaſing in company, endeared him to his numerous Friends, and whoſe perfect knowledge and public defence of the liberties of the American Colonies, during their late diſpute with Great-Britain, rendered him dear to all his countrymen.

Captain Inkſon, lately arrived here from Grenada, informs, that every thing was in the utmoſt confuſion; that Governor Leybourne had iſſued a proclamation, commanding all the French in the iſland to be naturalized, or depart in 25 days; that the fort and ſeveral parts of the town of St. George, had been ſet on fire, ſuppoſed by ſome of the French; and that a French frigate had arrived, and anchored in the harbour, who took upon her the ſtate of regularly firing her morning and evening guns.

BOSTON, MAY 7.

We hear that the duties on tea, paid into the revenue cheſt, have ariſen ſolely from the colony of the Maſſachuſetts-Bay.—A great ſign that all the colonies are perfectly acquieſcent in the acts of trade, except the factious Boſtonians!

It is ſaid that ſeveral ſhips which from time to time have ſneaked out of this harbour, are gone to cruiſe in the Southern governments, to prevent their trading like freemen with people againſt whom the laws of their country have not prohibited their commerce.

VERSES wrote at the Time of a late THUNDER STORM.

Time ſhall be ſtain, all Nature be deſtroy'd,
Nor leave an Atom in the mighty Void.
YOUNG's Laſt Day.

HERE the terrific Crack, the ſolemn Roar,
Announcing God's tremendous awful Pow'r!
The forky Light'ning marks its diſmal Way,
And fills the Soul with Terror and Diſmay!
See round the Æther gath'ring Clouds extend,
And Show'rs in Torrents on the Earth deſcend.
'Tis awful all! A ſolemn Silence reigns,
And ſpreads its Influence thro' the circling Veins:
The Soul abſorb'd, the hideous Proſpect ſees,
And bends ſubmiſſive to her God's Decrees.
Preſumptuous Man! here tremble and behold,
How vain thou art! how impotent and bold!
Thy greateſt Purpoſe but thy Weakneſs ſhews,
Inſtead of Joy, educes frequent Woes.
An abject Worm, the Shadow of a Shade,
Incapable of ought, without Almighty Aid.
A Crack like that, which now alarms my Soul,
Shall one Day ſwallow, and deſtroy the Whole.
This Earth, and all that beautiful we view,
Shall undiſtinguiſh'd fall, and periſh too;
And, like the baſeleſs Structure of a Dream,
Shall leave no Viſtage of its having been.
In that all dreadful Moment, when the Earth
Shall turn to Chaos, whence it drew its Birth;
When Soul and Body ſhall together flee,
To obey His great omnipotent Decree;
When dread tremendous Peals of Thunder roll,
Shall ſhake a ſinful World from Pole to Pole;
When the red Light'ning darts its keeneſt Rays,
And ſets the whole Creation in a Blaze;
Think then with what a Face thou'lt meet thy God!
To hear His Sentence, feel his chaſt'ning Rod.
If good and holy Deeds hath crown'd thy Days,
And thour't intitl'd to Almighty Praiſe.
But if alas! the black Reverſe appear,
Think of this Scene, at once repent ſincere.
Take this an Earneſt of his dreadful Might,
Give Reaſon Power to aſſume her Right;
Revere her Laws, and by her Precepts live,
And pray thy Maker, God, to pity and forgive.

Character of the IRISH, SCOTCH, and ENGLISH.

IF we compare the Inhabitants of Europe with thoſe of the other parts of the Globe, the latter will appear not much ſuperior to the fabled ſatyrs of antiquity, and poſſeſſed of little more humanity than the appearance. It is true, the Turks, Perſians, and Indians, have their ſchools for learning as well as we: In Conſtantinople, Grand Cairo, Iſpahan, and Agra, there are profeſſors appointed by the ſtate to inſtruct the nobility in aſtronomy, geometry, arithmatic, poetry, and the Arabic language; but their learning, inſtead of opening the mind, only adds obſtinacy and vanity to their ignorance; ſo that they labour under all the errors of falſehood, and all the pride of pedantry.

It is a ſubject worthy conſideration, how it comes to paſs that thoſe countries which enjoy ſo much fertility, and ſo happy a climate, where the inhabitants have not only leiſure to cultivate philoſophy, but have frequent admonitions to that purpoſe, in many of the books of their law; It is a matter of ſurpriſe, I ſay, how thoſe countries, which were the firſt to nurſe infant ſcience, and to divulge it to the world; who, after a long ſucceſſion of ignorance, once more under the Arabian caliphs emerged into politeneſs; it is ſurpriſing how they have relapſed into more than the priſtine barbarity.

The kingdoms of Aſia minor are by no means ſo populous now as formerly, and that from the defects of government; while one part of the country is too cloſely inhabited, another part is ſeen without any inhabitants at all; a country becomes ſteril by too much or too little cultivation; hence the whole face of nature is changed at length, here into ſpots worn out by too frequent tillage, there into tracts grown wild and barren from want of human culture. As every country becomes barren, it is proportionably depopulated; and as the people diminiſh, ſo do the love, and even the utility of the ſciences diminiſh alſo. Hence we ſee how the inhabitants of Aſia are more ſavage than thoſe of Europe: Where the whole domain is divided into ſmall diſtricts, and governed with equity; where the inhabitants are more equally diffuſed, and where all find in mutual diſtruſt mutual ſecruity. The difference between the Aſiatics and Europeans is ſtriking and obvious; and even the natives of the Eaſt themſelves acknowledge our mental ſuperiority. But it is a more difficult taſk, and requires a more acute diſcernment, to be able well to deſcribe the minute differences which obtain among the reſpective countries of Europe, compared with each other; to aſcertain the genius and character of each, how far it proceeds from accident, climate, government, or religion; and to repreſent the whole uninfluenced by reſentment, and unbiaſſed by national partiality.

To begin with Ireland, the moſt weſtern part of the continent, the natives are particularly remarkable for the gaiety and levity of their diſpoſition: the Engliſh, tranſplanted there in time, loſe their melancholly ſerious air, and become gay and thoughtleſs, more fond of pleaſure, and leſs addicted to reaſoning. This difference of diſpoſition cannot properly be ſaid to riſe from climate or ſoil, which is in general the ſame as in England; but merely from the nature of their government. They live in a fruitful country, ſequeſtered from the reſt of mankind, protected by a powerful nation from foreign inſult; and regardleſs of neighbouring greatneſs, they have no important national concerns to make them anxious, or cloud their tempers, with the ſolemnity of pride. In ſuch circumſtances they are contented with indolence and pleaſure, take every happineſs as it preſents, are eaſily excited to reſent, and as eaſily induced to ſubmiſſion.

Scotland, till of late, had in itſelf the power as well of foreign as domeſtic adminiſtration; a conſcienſciouſneſs of power, and a long continued government, always produces a love of one's country. The Scotch are therefore ſtill partial to their countrymen, and jealous of their country's honour. The cauſe of theſe paſſions firſt implanted among them, has ceaſed with the diſcontinuance of national adminiſtration; but the effects are ſtill viſible, and may continue ſo for ſeveral ages. Their country is barren, and conſequently the people are frugal; it would be abſurd for the natives to indulge the ſame deſire for pleaſure, that thoſe of the country before-mentioned entertain; for this would be to create wants which it is not in the power of nature to ſatisfy. Their frugality brings ſeveral other virtues in its train; they have fortitude in adverſity, becauſe they have from their youth been taught to ſuffer; and they have moderation in proſperity, for it is ſeldom that thoſe who have been bred frugally during the younger part of life, after a certain age gain new taſtes for luxury and refinement.

The Engliſh are not leſs divided from the reſt of the world by the circumfluent ſeas, than differing from them in their manners, diſpoſitions, and turn of thinking: and theſe peculiarities may be aſcribed partly to the government, and partly to the climate and ſoil. As the government is charged with the moſt important concerns of Europe, and as every man has ſome ſhare in the government, he by this means acquires a conſcious importance, and thus ſuperinduces that gloom of ſolid felicity which foreigners have miſtaken in ſome for melancholly and ſpleen: the ſoil is fruitful, and this prompts to luxury; but as thoſe neceſſaries which are eaten are produced in greater plenty and delicacy than thoſe which are drank; in other words, as the ſoil produces the moſt excellent meats, but no wines, the inhabitants are more apt to indulge an exceſs of eating than drinking; and this has a mechanical effect upon their tempers: it encreaſes their ſeeming ſeverity, ſo that they are grave without phlegm, and apparently ill-natured with hearts ſympathiſing with every diſtreſs. They are diſtinguiſhed from the reſt of Europe by their ſuperior accuracy in reaſoning, and are in general called the nation of philoſophers by their neighbours of the continent; this ſuperiority of reaſon is only the conſequence of their freedom; they purſue truth wherever it may lead, regardleſs of the reſult; and unawed by power, give a looſe to the moſt hidden workings of the mind: wherever philoſophy takes root in a country of freedom and ſolemnity, it muſt certainly flouriſh; the one gives courage to purſue the literary adventure, and the other gives perſeverance in the journey.

It has long however been a doubt, whether the paſſion for liberty, now implanted among the Engliſh, be merely the reſult of accident; or whether it proceeds from the influence of external cauſes, or whether an Engliſhman is naturally more fond of freedom than others, who are unacquainted with the happineſs of its effects.

If we regard ſome other animals which the country produces, and conſider their impetuoſity, their fierceneſs, their courage, and how they loſe theſe qualities when they leave the ſoil, we ſhall be apt to attribute that impatience of ſervitude, which the Engliſh are ſo very remarkable for, to phyſical cauſes.

They have even been noted for a jealouſy of their privileges, and even in the times of the Romans were remarkable for treating ſtrangers with ſeverity, whom they fancied were only ſpies upon their liberties and conſtitution.

This principle of liberty, of impatience under reſtraint, probably proceeds from their happy ſituation; as they have no foreign foes to diſtract their attention, every care is fixed upon internal happineſs, and as they know no external enemies that are truly dreadful, none can be ſo great a foe as he who would reſtrain that freedom of which ſtrangers leave them in quiet poſſeſſion.
